Industrial training has always gone hand in hand with the class room studies of Schofield School. The central idea of this branch of the work is to make tradesmen of those graduates who possess no natural aptitude or inclination for teaching. We have no complicated or expensive machinery as the opportunities in the South for such workmen are few and we try to fit our students for meeting home conditions

All boarding students take a course in one of the following departments Trade certificates are not awarded until four years of uninterrupted study are given to one branch, and a perfect knowledge of it is acquired.

We have taught Printing for twenty years and our graduates are at present filling many responsible positions in other schools and offices. Four years of close application are required before the junior, who first learns how to clean presses and care for the office, reaches his graduating work of making ready, under-laying and over-laying, casting off copy and estimating.

PRINTING SHOP. SCHOFIELD SCHOOL AIKEN S.C.

Our graduates in Harness-making are first class workmen, fully competent to teach others or conduct business on their own account. Our shop has competed successfully in business with the harness dealers of the neighboring cities for a number of years. As all our work is hand-made the cost of tools is trifling, and shops are being opened in the adjacent country towns by our students.

Our Carpenter work is of the most practical kind. Much time is spent by beginners in repairing, when the importance of economy is impressed. New work is taken up the second year and the student carried from the simplest operations at the bench to the most difficult ones in building. The dwelling house on the school farm was built by our carpenters.

The Farm, consisting of 280 acres, places an education within reach of any boy who is willing to work for it. Regular wages are paid with the understanding that money earned in this way will be used for school purposes. Corn, fruit, vegetable and stock raising are given equal prominence with cotton growing and the advantages of diversified farming practically demonstrated.

Shoemaking has lately been added to our industries for the benefit of country girls. A good custom trade is still being done in this part of the South and our foreman has already made a great many shoes to order. Most of the girls who were in the Shoe-shop last year learned to half-sole, patch and heel and have taken up new work this term. They are very enthusiastic about their trade.

Storekeeping, for the sale of old clothing donated to the school, and the instruction of students, has been a leading feature of our work since 1882. During the busy season we have over 100 customers a week who are waited on by students, under the supervision of a teacher. The one price system is adhered to, exactness in small things is observed and business conducted on a strictly cash basis.

STORE, AIKEN, S.C.

All girls learn Sewing in classes and the advanced ones are taught cutting, fitting and dress-making. Much work is done in this department for the Old Clothes' Store, both in the way of making up remnants and in repairing. The lesson of economy is emphasized here; clothing is never too old to be made over and a scrap of cloth never too small to be useless.

We give special attenion to washing. The popular method in the country districts is to soak soiled garments and "beat the dirt out" with a wooden paddle. Buttons are ruined, clothing torn and the dirt beaten in instead of out. Although over 100 persons, and half as many beds, are provided with the necessary weekly changes by our laundry all washing is done by hand so that the experience gained can be applied in the humble cabins of our students, where steam laundries are unknown.

We pursue similar methods in the Ironing Room. The same style of flat iron is used as our children find in their homes. Perfect cleanliness of all garments placed on the ironing boards is required and the extravagant use of blueing forbidden. Starch is sparingly used and a fine finish given by skillful work.
